Bruce Katz is a globally recognized expert in urban policy and economic development, with decades of experience helping cities and metropolitan areas address complex challenges and harness local assets for sustainable growth. As the Co-Founder of New Localism Advisors, Katz works with city leaders and stakeholders to design and implement innovative, place-based solutions to advance governance, economic resilience, and urban prosperity.

Katz is the co-author of two seminal books, The Metropolitan Revolution and The New Localism, which explore how cities can leverage their unique assets and networks to drive economic growth and tackle social challenges. These works provide a roadmap for city leaders navigating the challenges of globalization, technology, and climate change.

During his tenure as Vice President at the Brookings Institution, Katz directed the Metropolitan Policy Program, where he pioneered research and strategies that transformed how urban areas think about governance, public-private partnerships, and the global economy. His insights have guided cities across the world, from the United States to Europe and Asia, in building stronger, more inclusive local economies.

As a keynote speaker, Katz captivates audiences with his deep understanding of urban systems, practical advice for implementing change, and inspiring vision for the future of cities. His expertise equips leaders with the tools they need to address today's pressing challenges and build resilient, vibrant communities.
