Peter Prazmowski helps governments, business leaders, and institutions understand the policies and strategies that drive long-term competitiveness and economic growth. Drawing on decades of experience in economics, public policy, and institutional transformation, he explains how countries can improve productivity, attract investment, and build stronger economies. His presentations offer practical insights into the future of competitiveness, innovation, and sustainable development in Latin America.

Peter Prazmowski is an economist, public policy expert, and Executive Director of the Dominican Republic's National Competitiveness Council (Consejo Nacional de Competitividad – CNC), where he leads national initiatives to strengthen productivity, investment, institutional modernization, and economic competitiveness. He also serves as Executive Director of the Bureaucracy Zero Program and Meta RD 2036, an ambitious national strategy aimed at transforming the Dominican economy over the next decade.

Prior to joining the CNC, he advised the Dominican Republic's Central Bank, Ministry of Finance, Grupo León Jimenes, and the National Productivity and Competitiveness Group, developing deep expertise in macroeconomics, public policy, and economic development.

Peter holds a degree in Economics and Statistics from the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania, a Chevening Master's in Economics and Econometrics from the London School of Economics, and a PhD in Economics from Kingston University.

He is the author and co-author of several books and academic publications on macroeconomics, development, and competitiveness, including Gazebo, por un sueño país, co-authored with Xavier Sala-i-Martin. His keynote presentations combine rigorous economic analysis with practical policy experience, offering leaders actionable ideas for building more competitive economies and institutions.

PROGRAMAS

Building Competitive Nations

What separates countries that grow sustainably from those that fall behind? Peter explores the institutions, policies, and leadership required to improve productivity, attract investment, and strengthen national competitiveness in an increasingly complex global economy.

Competitiveness in an Era of Global Transformation

Geopolitical shifts, nearshoring, and technological disruption are reshaping global value chains. Peter examines how Latin America can capitalize on these changes by strengthening institutions, improving the business environment, and accelerating productivity.

Bureaucracy Zero: Reinventing Government for Growth

Efficient governments create competitive economies. Drawing on the Dominican Republic's Bureaucracy Zero initiative, Peter shares practical lessons on reducing red tape, modernizing public services, and creating a more agile state.

The Road to Meta 2036

How can a country double its income per capita within a generation? Peter presents the vision, strategy, and policy priorities behind Meta RD 2036 and the broader lessons for national transformation and long-term prosperity.
